WILL DISPUTE SENTENCES,

In Mis house.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The Daily News will to-morrow publish a dispatch from constantinople raying that Sir Philip Carrie, the British Ambassador, has demanded from the Porte an explanation of the arrest of the Rev. Mr. McCallum, a British clergyman, who was dispensing celled to the sufferers in Marasa.

A Paris dispatch to the Belly News cays that in an interview Mr. M. A. Jowett, the United States Consul at Sivas, who is now in Paris, stated that as would sail for New York to morrow. He remarked that the harvest in Armenta, has been good. It would have been before if the peasants, owing to disorders, had not sown loss than mont.

Mr. Jewott added that there was much missery in Sivas. About one-quarter of the Armentan shops there were open. The owners sought safety from attack by taking Turkish partners.

United States, July 2, 1728.

Observe that it is not "George Washington, of Virginia," but of "Mount Vernon," President Adams, you will also notice, dated his messages from the country-at-large. His handwriting is large and angular. In fact, it is easy to trace the educational progress of our country in the chirography of our chief rulers of that of their secretaries. As the narrator turned over message after message he could readily see where the school-master's art was making its impression until, from Adams runged lettering, we have evolutionized to the heautiful copperplate curves of the amanaenses of Arthur and Cleveland and Harrison,
Jefferson's economical apirit is clearly betrayed in his handwriter.
